

Gebrüder Weiss takes over Amm logistics in Konradsreuth

October 26, 2023

Gebrüder Weiss announces the next acquisition in Upper Franconia, Germany: with effect from the beginning of 2024, the logistics provider will take over the Konradsreuth location from the forwarding company Amm, which is going to operate under the Gebrüder Weiss brand in future.

The location near Hof will be continued in its current structure as part of the German general cargo cooperations Cargoline and NG.network, and will be connected to the network of the international logistics provider.

In particular, the takeover is subject to approval by the antitrust authorities.

The activities of the Amm forwarding company in the Nuremberg region will not be affected by this acquisition.

According to Wolfram Senger-Weiss, chief executive officer of Gebrüder Weiss, with annual revenues of three billion euros, Gebrüder Weiss does not count among the top players of the industry, "but among the medium-sized ones."

He added, "We are closer to our customers and employees, but can still offer a company-owned global network. In Germany, we are pursuing a clear growth strategy. Konradsreuth is going to play a central role within our national and international land transport network."

The region of Upper Franconia is an important industry location and an ideal transshipment point for land transports between Eastern Europe and Southern Germany, Austria and Switzerland.

Moreover, the Hof container terminal is located directly along the route from Hamburg through Leipzig down to the Adriatic Sea and can also be used for transporting goods by rail.

The memberships of the Konradsreuth location in the German general cargo cooperations Cargoline and NG.network will be continued under the orange flag.
