Like building two airports':
In fight against trucks, there's a battle to control trains

A $400 million freight hub in Melbourne's outer north will be so large that the Commonwealth doesn't need to spend $1.6 billion on its own facility 20 kilometres away, owners of the new rail terminal say.

The Somerton Intermodal Terminal, which is aimed at reviving rail freight and get trucks off the road, is due to open late next year at the Austrak Business Park, 21 kilometres north of the CBD. The terminal will make it possible to move imports from the Port of Melbourne to one of the city's key industrial zones by train rather than truck.
